Martin Chemnitz' Views on Trent: The Genesis and the Genius of the Examen Concilii Tridentini

ARThUR CaRL PIEPKORKN

Current Contributions to Christian Preaching

RICHARd R. CAEMMERER

Homiletics

Book Review

Vol. XXXVII    January 1966    No. 1
The Genesis and the Genius of the *Examen Concilii Tridentini*¹

Arthur Carl Piepkorn

"In recent centuries one or the other of [the] pillars supporting the Tridentine system have appeared to tremble, but as a whole the system has always survived the various crises which had only brought about certain individual degenerations. Beginning with 1958—1959, through a whole concourse of historical and spiritual factors, and certainly under an impulse of the Holy Spirit, the [Roman] Catholic Church (and more generally the entire Christian world) abandoned the Tridentine system on all fundamental themes. The brief intervening time cannot distract us from the global dimensions and the definitive significance of this abandonment." ²

The author of this statement, Giuseppe Alberigo, is a respected Italian Roman Catholic church historian, philosopher, and academician.³ The statement appeared in the pages of the influential multilingual international Roman Catholic hard-covered theological journal Concilium. Alberigo's words add relevance to a review of the genesis and genius of the great 16th-century Lutheran protest against the Council of Trent in the quadricentennial year of the publication of the first volume.

The Examen Concilii Tridentini ("A Weighing of the Council of Trent") is neither the first nor the last non-Roman-Catholic analysis of the synod that created the Roman Catholic Church. At the turn of the century, Reinhard Mumm (1873 to 1932) managed to list no fewer than 87 items written between 1546 and 1564 which polemicized against the Council.⁴

Arthur Carl Piepkorn is associate professor of church history and professor of philosophy at the University of Florence, secretary to the Centro di Documentazione of the Istituto per le Scienze Religiose of Bologna, and a frequent contributor to professional journals in the areas of theology and history.

¹ This article is a chapter in the Symposium on the Council of Trent, edited by Elmer Kiessling and scheduled for early publication by Concordia Publishing House, St. Louis, Mo. CONCORDIA THEOLOGICAL MONTHLY acknowledges with gratitude the permission to publish the present article in advance of the appearance of the book itself.

³ Alberigo (born 1926) holds a doctorate in jurisprudence from the Catholic University of Milan. He is associate professor of church history and professor of philosophy at the University of Florence, secretary to the Centro di Documentazione of the Istituto per le Scienze Religiose of Bologna, and a frequent contributor to professional journals in the areas of theology and history.

⁴ Reinhard Mumm, Die Polemik des Martin Chemnitz gegen das Konzil von Trient (Naumburg-an-der-Saale: Lippert und Co. [G. Pätz'sche Buchdruckerei], 1905), pp. 79—90. A subtitle reads: Erster Theil, mit einem Verzeichnis der gegen das Konzil von Trient gerichteten Schriften; the second part which this subtitle implies and to which Mumm makes frequent proleptic references in the footnotes of the first part was apparently never published. After a pastorate in Dortmund, Mumm moved more and more into the political arena, joined the Christian Social Party of Adolf Stöcker (1835—1909), later became successively a member of the German-National Party and (in 1929) of the Christian-
It is true that 41 of these titles are from the pen of a single author, Peter Paul Vergerio (1497—1565), and that the list includes the third edition of the Heidelberg Catechism (1563) wholly on the basis of the revised answer to Question 80, deliberately formulated to condemn the Tridentine decree on the sacrifice of the mass. It is clear, however, that Chemnitz is far from having been the first to discover the peril that Tridentine theology represented for heirs of the Reformation.

In turn, down to 1760 at least, 39 critical works on the Council of Trent followed the Examen. The international roster of their authors includes Luke Bacmeister (1530—1608); George Carleton (1559 to 1628), bishop of Chichester; the Servite friar Paul Sarpi (1552—1623), who wrote under the anagrammatic pseudonym Pietro Soave and whose historical study is the only critique of Trent to have been published in more editions than the Examen; John Hülsemann (1602—1661); Abraham Calovius (1612—1686); George Calixtus (1586—1656); Herman Conring (1606—1681); Balthasar Cellarius (1614 to 1671); John Henry Heidegger (1633 to 1698), who depends strongly on Chemnitz; John-Conrad Dannhawer (1603 to 1666); Peter Jurieu (1637—1713); Edward Stillingfleet (1635—1699), bishop of Winchester; Paul Anton (1661 to 1730); and Ernest Solomon Cyprian (1673 to 1745).

Yet, though the Examen is neither the first nor the last work of its kind on the subject, from its first appearance it asserted itself as the standard by which others were measured, and (with the possible exception of Sarpi’s quite different Istoria) it has shown a capacity to survive the passage of time shared by none of its rivals.

THE AUTHOR

Martin Chemnitz (Chemnitius, Chemitianus, Kemnitz, Kemnitius, Kemnicius)
was born in 1522 at Treuenbritzen, about 37 miles south-southwest of the Brandenburger Tor in Berlin. His father, a woolweaver and shopkeeper, died when Martin was 11. His mother apprenticed him to the woolweaver's craft, but the generosity of a friend of the family made it possible for him to resume his interrupted secondary education at Magdeburg. A brief stint of schoolteaching preceded his matriculation at the University of Frankfurt-an-der-Oder. In 1545, after another six months of schoolteaching at Wriezen-an-der-Oder (and of collecting the local sales tax on fish), he transferred to the University of Wittenberg, where he studied the classics and sciences and became interested in astrology. He was about to take his master's degree under Philip Melanchthon (1497—1560) when the Smalcald War broke out. He followed a relative, the poet-laureate and historian George Sabinus (1508—1560), to the newly established University of Königsberg (now Kaliningrad). Here he continued his studies while heading up the Kneiphof School, and in 1548, at the first degree-granting convocation of the new university, he took his master's degree, with Duke Albert of Prussia (1490—1568) bearing the expenses of Chemnitz' promotion. When pestilence ravaged Königsberg in 1548, Chemnitz retired to Salfeld and studied Peter Lombard and Luther. Back at Königsberg, he sent Duke Albert a horoscope which he had cast for the prince and thereby won for himself the post of ducal librarian. His interests turned increasingly from astrology to theology, for which the resources of the library provided ample scope. Meanwhile Andrew Osiander (1498—1552) had come to Königsberg and had provoked the controversy on justification. At the duke's command, Chemnitz was one of the two theologians designated to oppose Osiander at a public disputation which was to end the year-and-a-half-old controversy, but Chemnitz' bold assault on the ducal favorite almost resulted in his own dismissal. Joachim Mörlin (1514—1571) managed to achieve a brief peace of sorts between the contending parties, but the conflict broke out anew. Caught in the conflict of loyalties to his friend Mörlin and to his ducal benefactor, Chemnitz resigned his post at the end of 1552 and left Königsberg in early 1553. En route to Wittenberg again, he stopped over at Danzig (now Gdansk) and at Cüstrin (now Kostrzyn); here he cast a horoscope for Margrave John (1535 to 1571) of Brandenburg-Cüstrin, who gave him a 50 Thaler honorarium for it. At Wittenberg he became a boarder in Melanchthon's home, and in January 1554 he was admitted to the philosophical faculty as an examiner. In June he began to lecture on Melanchthon's Loci communes ("Commonplaces") before large student audiences. In the meantime Mörlin had become Superintendens of the churches

Preuss, "Vita Martini Chemnicii," in the author's edition of Examen Concilii Tridentini per Martinum Chemnicium scriptum (Berlin: Gustav Schlawitz, 1861), pp. 925—988; Heinrich Schmid and Johannes Kunze, "Chemnitz, Martin," in Realencyklopädie für protestantische Theologie und Kirche, 3d ed., III (1897), 796 to 804; Munn, pp. 28—78. In accessible to this writer were Johannes Gasmer, Oratio de vita, studiis et obitu Martini Chemnicii ([Bruns­wick?]: No publisher, 1588), and Hermann Hachfeld, Martin Chemnitz nach seinem Leben und Wirken, insbesondere nach seinem Ver­hältnisse zum Tridentinum (Leipzig: Breitkopf und Härtel, 1867). A comprehensive biography of Chemnitz is a major desideratum.
in the Lower Saxon city of Brunswick and he invited Chemnitz to become his coadjutor. Chemnitz delivered his last lecture in Wittenberg on October 20. On St. Catherine’s Day, John Bugenhagen (1485—1558) ordained him to the sacred ministry in St. Mary’s Church, and Chemnitz entered upon his new office in Brunswick in mid-December. The following year he married Anna Jäger — described as pia, pulchra et parca — who bore him two sons and eight daughters.

Self-imposed tasks at Brunswick included a semiannual public disputation on a selected set of doctrinal theses, of which Polycarp Leyser the Elder (1552 to 1610) was able to include 19 in his edition of Chemnitz’ Loci theologici (“Theological Commonplaces”), the continuation of his lectures on Melanchthon’s Loci. Chemnitz began the study of Hebrew in 1556 and made rapid progress. His association with Mörlin was most cordial, and Chemnitz’ prudent moderation served as a brake upon Mörlin’s occasional bursts of excessively vehement zeal. The year 1557 saw both of them first at Wittenberg attempting to help relieve the tensions evoked by the Adiaphoristic and Synergistic controversies and then, later, at Worms for the famous colloquy between the Roman Catholics and the Lutherans.

Chemnitz’ first published work, Vera et sana doctrina de praesentia corporis et sanguinis Christi in sacra coena (“The True and Sound Doctrine about the Presence of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Holy Communion”) came off the press at Leipzig in 1560, followed by a German version and (in 1561) a second Latin edition under the title Repetitio sanae doctrinae (“Repetition of the Sound Doctrine”). Moderate in tone, although unqualified in its rejection both of the papalist and of the Reformed positions, it won immediate approval; for example, in reply to a request for counsel from King John II Sigismund Zápolya (d. 1571), the theological faculty of the University of Rostock recommended Chemnitz’ work as the simplest and most accurate exposition of Eucharistic doctrine to be had.

In 1562 Chemnitz became involved in his long controversy with the Jesuits and with the Roman Catholic Church that was to engage almost all his leisure for over a decade. From 1567 on, however, the needs of the Lutheran community made more and more levies upon his time. In that year, Mörlin and Chemnitz returned to Prussia to prepare a corpus doctrinae, or collection of symbolical books, for the Lutheran Church in Duke Albert’s domains. After they had returned to Brunswick, Duke Albert sought to secure their services permanently, Mörlin to become bishop of Samland, Chemnitz to become dean of the cathedral in Königsberg. After some negotiations, the common council of the boroughs of Brunswick agreed to let Mörlin go provided that Chemnitz would accept the superintendency. This he agreed to do after the council in turn had accepted certain conditions designed to secure the freedom of the church and of the clergy from inappropriate interference, and he entered upon his new duties the same year. In 1568 he took the degree of doctor of sacred theology at the University of Rostock with the cost of his promotion borne by the Brunswick council. In the same year, at the invitation of Duke Julius (1529 to 1589), the new Lutheran ruler of the Duchy of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, Chemnitz, in association with James Andreae (1528—1590), supervised the introduction of the Lutheran Reformation into the previously Roman Catholic territory. For the guidance of the clergy Chemnitz drafted a set of symbols, a service-book, and Die furchtbarsten Hauptstucke der christlichen Lehre (“The Most Important Chief Parts of Christian Teaching”), later retitled Handbüchlein der christlichen Lehre (“Little Manual of Christian Teaching”).

The year 1568 also saw the issuance of his theological opinion in connection with the controversy on good works that centered around George Major (1502—1574) and Nicholas von Amsdorf (1483—1565), the quondam bishop of Naumburg-Zeitz; this presaged a constantly increasing role in the adjudication of the controversies that had been dividing the Lutheran community since 1546. In 1571 Chemnitz wrote the Lower Saxon Confession, subscribed to at Heinrichstadt (now part of Wolfenbüttel) by the theologians of Rostock and Lower Saxony, and later by the clergy of Hamburg and Lübeck. In 1574 he reworked Andreae’s Swabian Concordia to produce the Swabian-Saxon Concordia. In 1576—the same year in which Duke Julius formally published a slightly expanded version of the Corpus Julianum that Chemnitz had compiled (and in part written) as the doctrinal norm for his territories — Chemnitz participated in the conference at Torgau which welded into a single document (the “Torgau Book”) the Swabian-Saxon Concordia and the Maulbronn Formula of Luke Osiander (1534—1604) and Balthasar Bidembach (1533—1578). In 1577 he played an important role in the conference at Bergen Abbey at which the criticisms of the Torgau Book were taken account of and the Formula of Concord was produced and signed by Andreae, Nicholas Selneccer (1528—1592), Andrew Musculus (1514—1581), Christopher Comeurus (1518—1594), David Chytraeus (1531—1600), and Chemnitz. After the formal publication of the Book of Concord on June 25, 1580, half a century to the day after the reading of the Augsburg Confession before the imperial diet of 1530, Chemnitz was one of the three theologians designated to prepare the Apologia oder Verantwortung des christlichen Concordienbuchs (“An Apology or Defense of the Christian Book of Concord”), published in four parts in 1582 and 1583.

In 1576, Chemnitz participated in the formal inauguration of the new imperially chartered University of Helmstedt. That 9 When plans were being made for the formal opening, Chemnitz in a letter to Duke Julius spontaneously promised that “in view of the imminent inauguration and publication of the privileges [of the university] he would give careful attention to the arrangement of the sky, to ascertain when there would be a favorable constellation [for the occasion].” The practical-minded duke wrote back that “it was far more necessary to be concerned about the sources of the income for the support of the academy than about [a horoscope], since ‘the stars incline but do not compel’” (Rehtmeyer, III, 418—419).

The 20th century is inclined to take what may be too jaundiced a view of the interest of men like Chemnitz in astrology. Until the mid-17th century it was a perfectly respectable avocation of a Lutheran clergyman; thus John Michaelis (1597—1658), rector of the Royal Paedagogium in Stettin (Szczecin), in his “Memoria ... Dr. Christophori Schulteti [1602 to 1649]” gives a very careful horoscope cast for the exact hour of his subject’s birth; it is reproduced in Henningus Witten, Memoriae theologorum nostri saeculi clarissimorum renovatae same year — in consideration of a grant of 1,000 Thaler — he entered into an agreement with the city council of Brunswick not to accept any other vocation.

In 1578 a rift in his friendship with Duke Julius occurred, when, against Chemnitz' advice, the duke scandalized the Lutheran community by having his 14-year-old Lutheran son, the later Duke Henry Julius (1564—1613), who at the age of two had been elected bishop of Halberstadt through the influence of his Roman Catholic grandfather, Duke Henry (1514—1568) of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, receive the tonsure (along with two of his brothers) at the hands of the Roman Catholic Abbot of Huysenburg and by having him formally introduced into his see with the traditional Roman Catholic rite and ceremonial. The rift became wider in 1579, when Duke Julius attempted to muzzle Chemnitz and the clergy of the city of Brunswick. Ultimately the duke receded from his position, but the old intimacy with Chemnitz was never restored; the duke withdrew his subscription to the Book of Concord on a technicality, and so the Corpus Julianum rather than the Book of Concord became the symbolical standard of the duchy in the subsequent period.

In spite of Chemnitz' bold anti-Roman-Catholic stand, he was not anti-Roman-Catholic on principle and at all costs. Thus in 1582, in his Bericht vom neuen pabst-
THE GENESIS AND THE GENIUS OF THE EXAMEN

THE CONTROVERSY WITH THE JESUITS

On the Feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, 1534, Ignatius of Loyola (1491—1556) with six companions had founded in Paris what was to become the Society of Jesus. In 1540 Pope Paul III (1468—1549) had confirmed the foundation of the society with his bull Regimini militantis ecclesiae. Alphonse Salmeron (1515—1585) and Peter Canisius (1521—1597) came to the University of Ingolstadt in 1549. The Collegium Germanicum came into being at Rome in 1552 to prepare young Germans for the task of leading their homeland back to union with the Roman see. In 1554 Ignatius of Loyola drafted a master plan for the destruction of the Reformation in Germany. Two years later the Society established itself at the languishing University of Cologne and soon proceeded to dominate the theological faculty. The Cologne Jesuits received their first great opportunity to test their theological mettle in 1560.

John Monhemius (1509—1564) was the brilliant and influential headmaster of the academy at Düsseldorf. He had demonstrated his Erasmian leanings in three catechisms which he had edited in 1547 and 1551. In 1560 he showed himself a full-blown, even though cautious, Calvinist, in his Catechismus in quo christianae religionis elementa . . . explicantur (“A Catechism in Which the Elements of the Christian Religion . . . Are Unfolded”). Designed for students in the fourth and fifth forms, it consists of 11 dialogues between a father and his son.12

The Jesuits at Cologne, as part of their program to save the lower Rhine territories for the papacy, responded with their Censura et docta explicatio errorum catechismi Johannis Monhemii, grammatici Duesseldorpensis, in qua tum s(acrae) scripturae atq(ue) vestussis(imorum) patrum testimoniis, tum evidentiss(imis) rationibus veritas catholicæ religionis defenditur, per deputatos a sacra theologica facultate universitatis Coloniensis (“An Evaluation and Learned Unfolding of the Errors of the Catechism of John Monhemius, Grammarian at Düsseldorf, in Which the Truth of the Catholic Religion Is Defended Both with the Testimonies of the Sacred Scriptures and of the Most Ancient Fathers and with the Most Evident Reasons, by Persons Which the Faculty of Sacred Theology at the University of Cologne Has Charged with This Responsibility”).13 The work bears marks of having been put together rather hastily by a number of authors. Nevertheless, it is in general a competently written attack on Monhemius’ work, on the reading of the Sacred Scriptures by laymen, and on the individual’s certainty of salvation. It follows the pattern of medieval theology in its uneasy synthesis of works-righteousness and righteousness by grace. It demands a subjection of the secular power to the church. It devotes 22 pages to a defense of the communion of the congregation under the appearance of the consecrated bread alone. The authors are well acquainted with the positions of the Reformers; they quote both the fathers (notably the writings of St. Augustine and

12 Mumm, pp. 18—21.
13 The publisher is Maternus Cholinus of Cologne, the date 1560. The book runs to 354 pages, plus an index. The library of Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, has a microfilm copy of the original in the Universitätsbibliothek, Munich. A second edition came out in Cologne in 1582.
Terrullian’s De praescriptione) and the medieval scholastics. They quote the Bible in the original, although their interpretations involve “unscrupulous eisegesis.”

What makes this work significant for the prehistory of Chemnitz’ Examen is that their clinching argument is often a decree of the Council of Trent!

Monhemius’ prince, Duke William V (1516—1592) of Jülich, forbade Monhemius to reply, in the hope that he could thereby placate the Roman Catholic party and also evade the necessity of banishing his brilliant headmaster. The task of replying in the name of the Düsseldorf academy thus fell upon the otherwise unknown Henry Artopoeus (Becker), who produced a lively rejoinder, cannily published outside the country in September 1561, which paid the Jesuits off in their own coin. The Censura drew at least two other replies. The more important of the two, which concerned itself with the church-and-state issue raised by the Censura, was the critical Responsio duodecimi articuli in censura theologorum Coloniensium de catechismo M. Johannis Monhemii (“A Reply to the Twelfth Article of the Evaluation of the Catechism of John Monhemius, His Teacher”) (Grenoble: Petrus Cephalius Duromontanus, 1561).

Friend of Chemnitz. This work, also published in 1561, saw a second printing the same year, edited by Chemnitz’ Brunswick colleague, John Neukirchen (Neophanius).

His interest aroused by these developments, Chemnitz now entered the lists in 1562 with his Theologiae Jesuitarum praecipua capita ex quadam ipsorum censura, annotata (“The Chief Chapters of the Theology of the Jesuits, Taken from an Evaluation of Theirs and Annotated”).

The dedicatory epistle, dated Jan. 27, 1562, is addressed to Elector Joachim II (1505 to 1571) of Brandenburg, and contains this statement: “So that these messengers of the bishop of Rome [i.e., the Jesuits] may be more fully exposed and so that they might become known in our churches (for the ruination of which their idol called them into being) not only by name, but particularly in terms of the criminal shamelessness of what they teach, I felt that it would be worth my while to assemble from that Censura of theirs the chief chapters of Jesuit theology, so that, sketched as it were in brief tabular form and set forth for the world to see, they could be recognized by all men and might be appreciated for what they really are. If this kind of thing represents the first-fruits of their preliminary exercises, let the kind reader determine for himself what Germany can await from this sect in the future if it should acquire great strength."

---

The sharp, sometimes witty, sometimes heavily ironic, but consistently hard-hitting attack on the Neopelagianism and the indefensible hermeneutics of the Censura takes the position that the Jesuit doctrine represents a new development within the papalist community which deserves a specific refutation.

A Joachim Loneman of Salzwedel contributes an uncomplimentary 72-line "hendecasyllable" on the Jesuits. An introductory chapter discusses the origin of the Society. In the course of this chapter Chemnitz quotes some speculations on the origin and meaning of the name Jesuit, but soberly insists that he is merely "reviewing various opinions and then allowing the reader to make his own decision." Some Roman emperors were called Africanus, Germanicus, and Asiaticus, not because they were the friends but the conquerors of the people whose name they took; this would make the Jesuits the sworn enemies of the Lord Jesus. Some looked for similar-sounding names in the Old Testament and thought that "Jesuit" might be a kind of paranomasia for Esauites or Jebusites. Working from the Latin, one could resolve Jesuita into Jesum vita ("Avoid Jesus"). In Low German Jesu witt means "far from Jesus." In High German Jesuwider means "against Jesus"; the shift from "t" to "d" presents no problem, since a Thumbherr (modern, Domherr, canon in a cathedral chapter or a collegiate church) rates as a dummer Herr ("a stupid mister"). Some hold that Jesuwider is an inadvertent but idiomatic German rendering of "Antichrist." Some etymologists regard the initial syllable of a word as a superfluous addition, hence for Jesuitae read Suitae, the name Horace applies to "a hog of the sect of Epicurus."

Chemnitz follows the introductory chapter with 15 doctrinal chapters — on the Sacred Scriptures, sin, free will, the Law, the Gospel, justification, faith, good works, the Holy Communion, the invocation of the saints, penance, confirmation, extreme unction, images and celibacy. A final chapter discusses "certain Jesuit axioms scattered here and there" in the work. When the Jesuits find that some point of theirs cannot be proved from the Sacred Scriptures, they have found it safer to say in essence: (1) It is a tradition, and when even this cannot be proved, the bare assertion suffices; (2) the church, that is, the bishop of Rome and his supporters, have so ruled, and such a ruling deserves no less respect than an explicit word of God; (3) nonecclesiastics ought not to ask if the things proposed to them are right or otherwise, but ought humbly kiss the hinder parts of the chapter in canon law which begins Si Papa; (4) if the learned contradict, let them at once be got rid of with sword or flame.

There are a few references to the Council of Trent, for instance, to the decree on the Vulgate,\(^{19}\) to the "blasphemous" decree which anathematizes those who say that the satisfaction of penitents is nothing else than faith which trusts that Christ made satisfaction for them;\(^{20}\) and to the experience of the bishop of Chioggia, whom the papal legates expelled from the Council of Trent when he expressed displeasure at the decree which declared that traditions ought to be received and kept with the same dutiful affection and reverence as the written Gospel; as well as the effort of Stanislaus Hosius (1504–1579) to support the council's position on tradition with a quotation from Plato.\(^{21}\)

Chemnitz' faithful friend and colleague John Zanger, an Innsbruck-born convert to the Lutheran Church, translated the work into German before the year was out under the title Vom neuen Orden der Jesuswidcr, was ihr GlaubJe sei und wie sie wider Jesus und sein heiliges Evangelium streiten ("Of the New Order of Opponents of Jesus, What They Believe and How They Make War on Jesus and His Holy Gospel"). Both in Latin and German the work received instant and widespread recognition.

Even apart from its irony and sarcasm, there are other defects in the work, some of which Mumm points out. At one point Chemnitz attributes to the Jesuits the hoary comparison of the Sacred Scriptures to a "wax nose,"\(^{22}\) although the Censura cites this not as a Jesuit principle but as a vulgar axiom. Again, the unqualified charge that the Jesuits teach that the church has power to alter institutions and prescriptions of the Sacred Scriptures\(^{23}\) has not taken cognizance of the parenthetic illustration of the Censura — "as Acts 15

---

14 Ch. X, Sec. xi.

20 Ch. XII, Sec. iii.

21 Ch. XVII, under Axiom 1. The "bishop of Chioggia" referred to was James Nacchianti (1500?–1569); see Hubert Jedin, A History of the Council of Trent, trans. Ernest Graf, II (St. Louis: B. Herder Book Co., c. 1961), 64 to 65 (esp. n. 2), 86–87, 92–93.

22 Ch. II, Sec. ii.

23 Ch. XVII, under Axiom 2.
makes clear in connection with things strangled and blood and the keeping of the Sabbath that the Sacred Scriptures command." 24

The counterfire began promptly. An otherwise unknown John Albrecht (Albertus), lay professor of oratory at the University of Ingolstadt — where Jesuits had been teaching since 1549 — wrote a plaintive and rambling German defense of the Society, 25 designed primarily, it would seem, to counter the effect of Zan-

24 Mumm, pp. 44—45. Mumm also states that he could not locate two passages which imply moral relativism on the part of the Jesuits and which Chemnitz quotes in chapter V, section iv, either on the leaf which Chemnitz cites or anywhere else in the Censura.

25 The forms Alberus and Allerus seem to be mistakes.

26 The full title reads: Von der Gesellschaft Jesu warthaler und wolgegründeter Bericht, mit Widerlegung des uppigen lästerlichen Schreibens, so hayde Martin Kemnitz und Johann Zanger, die Diener zu Braunschwey, haben neuwicch wider das Cölnisch Buch, Censuram etc., lassen ausgebung, durch Ioannem Albertum Wimpinensem, Professorem zu Ingolstatt (Ingolstadiens academy, N. p., MDLXIII; 13 unnumbered pages, 120 numbered leaves; 10 by 15 cm.) The work is dedicated to Pater Smaeyner, Benedictine Abbot of Niederalten (i.e., Niederaltaich, currently one of the centers of German Roman Catholic ecumenical activity). The dedicatory epistle is dated August 10, 1563. The library of Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, has an electrostatic reproduction from a microfilm kindly supplied by the Universitätsbibliothek, Munich. Von der Gesellschaft Jesu reveals that Albert was a master of arts and a lay ("a simple common layman," p. a vi recto) professor of oratory at the University of Ingolstadt. The agnomen Wimpinensis (alias Wimpineus) identifies his birthplace as Wimpfen, Kreis Heilbronn. For additional information about him, Oberbibliotheksrat Dr. phil. Ladislaus Buzás of the Universitätsbibliothek in Munich has thoroughly examined the sources available to him and has kindly communicated his findings to me in a letter dated February 25, 1964. The items which heSUMER

The counterfire began promptly. An otherwise unknown John Albrecht (Albertus), lay professor of oratory at the University of Ingolstadt — where Jesuits had been teaching since 1549 — wrote a plaintive and rambling German defense of the Society, designed primarily, it would seem, to counter the effect of Zan-

24 Mumm, pp. 44—45. Mumm also states that he could not locate two passages which imply moral relativism on the part of the Jesuits and which Chemnitz quotes in chapter V, section iv, either on the leaf which Chemnitz cites or anywhere else in the Censura.

25 The forms Alberus and Allerus seem to be mistakes.

26 The full title reads: Von der Gesellschaft Jesu warthaler und wolgegründeter Bericht, mit Widerlegung des uppigen lästerlichen Schreibens, so hayde Martin Kemnitz und Johann Zanger, die Diener zu Braunschwey, haben neuwicch wider das Cölnisch Buch, Censuram etc., lassen ausgebung, durch Ioannem Albertum Wimpinensem, Professorem zu Ingolstatt (Ingolstadiens academy, N. p., MDLXIII; 13 unnumbered pages, 120 numbered leaves; 10 by 15 cm.) The work is dedicated to Pater Smaeyner, Benedictine Abbot of Niederalten (i.e., Niederaltaich, currently one of the centers of German Roman Catholic ecumenical activity). The dedicatory epistle is dated August 10, 1563. The library of Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, has an electrostatic reproduction from a microfilm kindly supplied by the Universitätsbibliothek, Munich. Von der Gesellschaft Jesu reveals that Albert was a master of arts and a lay ("a simple common layman," p. a vi recto) professor of oratory at the University of Ingolstadt. The agnomen Wimpinensis (alias Wimpineus) identifies his birthplace as Wimpfen, Kreis Heilbronn. For additional information about him, Oberbibliotheksrat Dr. phil. Ladislaus Buzás of the Universitätsbibliothek in Munich has thoroughly examined the sources available to him and has kindly communicated his findings to me in a letter dated February 25, 1964. The items which heSUMER
no member of the Society of Jesus had undertaken to reply to his work. "Nevertheless, so that they would not be altogether silent, which might have been interpreted as a fault, they pushed forth a kind of hired messenger, an exceedingly wretched little far-shooting Apollo, John Alber[t]us of the University of Ingolstadt, who put on his mask and as if it were on a stage acted out that play written in German in such a laughable fashion, that he had hardly begun the introduction (protasis) when he saw from afar the development of the drama's action (epitasis), threw off his mask, and dashed out of the theater, but not before he had given the spectators hope that soon another comic actor would follow him who would complete the rest of the drama if not more happily, at least more nobly." 27

D'ANDRADA'S Orthodoxae Explicationes

Meanwhile another defender of the Jesuits was entering the lists. James Payva d'Andrada (1528—1576?) was a secular priest and a missionary-minded professor of theology at the Portuguese University of Coimbra. The young Jesuit-educated King Sebastian I of Portugal (1554 to 1578) had sent d'Andrada to the Council of Trent as a member of a 4-man team of theologians. At the Council his homiletic abilities, his learned orations, his more than rudimentary acquaintance with the published works of the Reformers, and a brilliant paper on the authority of the pope soon secured for him an impressive reputation. At Trent he seems to have chanced on Chemnitz' Theologiae Jesuistarum praecipua capita by himself.28 One of those who strongly urged d'Andrada to prepare a reply was King Sebastian's orator at Trent, Ferdinand Martinez of Mascarenhas, who had been informed by "many" in conversation that Chemnitz' work was being received among the Lutherans and the Reformed with great enthusiasm.29 The nature of the debate at Trent at the mo-

27 Martinus Chemicius, Examen Concilii Tridentini, ed. Ed[uardus} Preuss (Berlin: Gustav Schlawitz, 1861), Part One, praefatio, par. 1, p. lA. Hereafter page references in the Examen are to this edition, the letters A and B representing the left-hand and right-hand columns respectively. Chemnitz presumably has in mind the statement which Albertus makes almost exactly halfway through his book: "Inasmuch as we have received certain information that a highly learned and able theologian has already begun a comprehensive confirmation and apology and has progressed very far in his work, I have regarded it as unnecessary to follow my original undertaking and to provide a lengthier refutation and thus to infringe upon someone else's labors, especially since the other work is so arranged and so solidly founded that thereby Kemnitz and his translator will receive more than enough" (fol. 57).

29 "Accessit summ a Ferdinandi Martinez Mascarenii ... auctoritas qui cum multorum sermone intellexisset, hos commentarios magno cum haereticorum omnium applau su et gratulatione exceptus suisse, vehementer me incitavit" (ibid., fol. [*4] recto). Among the multi we can well include three of the leading Jesuits attending the Council: James Lainez (1512 to 1565), the second general of the Society; Salmeron, who had attended the crucial imperial diet of Augsburg in 1555; and Canisius, first provincial of the Society's German province.
ment gave d’Andrada the necessary leisure. The work came out in Venice in 1564. The printer to the University of Cologne, Maternus Cholinus, who had published the Censura (as he reminds the “candid reader” in his brief address following the title page), reproduced the Venice edition in Germany.

D’Andrada dedicates the 10-book work to his monarch. The first book begins with a slashing attack on the “impious, crafty, passionate, Satanic” catechism of Monhemius. Chemnitz, whom he calls — somewhat proleptically — a Brunswick doctor, is a pseudoprophet whom Satan has incited. Next d’Andrada gives a life of Ignatius of Loyola and a somewhat dithyrambic description of the progress of the Society. This first book was published separately as well.

The title of the “extremely rare” (so Toussaint) Venice edition reads: Orthodoxarum explicationum libri decem, in quibus omnia fere de religione capita, quae his temporibus ab haereticis in controversiam vocantur, aperte et dilucide explicantur, praesertim contra Martini Kemnicii petulantem audaciam, qui Coloniensem censuram, quam a viris Societatis Jesu compositam esse ait, una cum ejusdem sanctissae societatis vitae ratione, temere calumniandam suscepit (“The Ten Books of the Orthodox Interpretations, in Which Almost All the Chapters About Religion That in These Times Have Been Called into Controversy by the Heretics Are Frankly and Clearly Unfolded, Especially Against the Wanton Impudence of Martin Kemnitz, Who Rashly Undertook to Misrepresent the Cologne Evaluation, Which He Says Was Put Together by Men of the Society of Jesus, Along with an Account of the Life of the Same Most Holy Society”).

Except for the place of publication and the publisher’s name, the Cologne title is all but identical with that of the Venice edition. The library of Concordia Seminary, St. Louis has a microfilm copy of each edition, made from originals in the Universitätsbibliothek, Munich.

The remaining nine books discuss the questions that Chemnitz had raised in his attack on the Jesuits — the sacred Scriptures, sin, free will, the Law and the Gospel, justification and faith, the Holy Communion, penance, confirmation and extreme unction, the veneration of the saints and images, and celibacy. The viewpoint is the rigidly authoritarian one which the Iberian bishops represented at Trent.

THE EXAMEN CONCILII TRIDENTINI

Chemnitz gladly picked up the gage of battle that d’Andrada had thrown at his feet. Obviously the 10 books of the Coimbra professor’s ambitious effort demanded a similarly extensive reply. The course of events seemed to Chemnitz to dictate the form that his reply must take.

For one thing, the Censura had repeatedly clinched its points by quoting a Tridentine decree. For another, d’Andrada, himself a participant in the Council, had written his attack on Chemnitz at Trent. If Chemnitz concluded that d’Andrada had written his book by direction of the Council itself, he cannot be blamed too much.

Finally, the fact that d'Andrada's book arrived in Brunswick almost simultaneously with the last decrees of Trent decided Chemnitz' course for him: He would analyze the doctrinal decrees of Trent at the hand of the commentary with which he saw d'Andrada's book providing him.

This decision, natural for a person of Chemnitz' mind-set, had two consequences. By concentrating almost exclusively on the dogmatic decrees Chemnitz spared himself the added effort of a full-dress discussion of the Council's decisions in the area of reform. Yet these reform decrees were not uninfluenced by doctrinal considerations, nor were they without doctrinal implications; except by an intolerably narrow definition of "doctrine," many of the reform decrees were really doctrinal too. The fact that Chemnitz deliberately ignored them almost altogether tended to render incomplete, at least to some extent, the picture of Trent which the Examen gave to the non-Roman-Catholic reader whose chief source of information about Trent would be this volume.

Similarly, by letting d'Andrada's work serve as a commentary on the Tridentine decrees, Chemnitz canonized for his readers as the authentic understanding of the Tridentine position the partisan interpretation of the Latin theologians of the extreme right. Thus Chemnitz introduced into the Lutheran interpretation of Trent a hermeneutical skew which largely foreclosed the possibility of a more moderate and a more "evangelical" interpretation.34

Indeed, one of the first major Roman Catholic attempts at refuting the Examen, that of Jodoc Ravesteyn, strongly criticizes and the Roman Catholic position on justification as unbridgeable. Yet such inquiries as Hanns Rückett, Die Rechtfertigungsidee auf dem Tridentinischen Konzil, (Bonn: A. Marcus und E. Weber's Verlag, 1925), and Hans Küng, Rechtfertigung: Die Lehre Karl Barth und eine Katholische Besinnung (Einsiedeln: Johannes Verlag, c. 1957), translated by Thomas Collins, Edmund E. Tolk, and David Granskou as Justification: The Doctrine of Karl Barth and a Catholic Reflection (New York: Thomas Nelson and Sons, c. 1964), indicate that the Tridentine fathers were far from unanimous in their doctrine of justification and that some of this diversity finds expression in the language of Trent. Similar differences in opinion are alleged in the case of the relation of Scripture and tradition; see Gabriel Moran, Scripture and Tradition: A Survey of the Controversy (New York: Herder and Herder, 1963), and Georges Tavard, "The Problem of Tradition Today," in Gregory Baum, ed., Ecumenical Theology Today (Glen Rock, N. J.: Paulist Press, 1964), pp. 18 to 27. At the same time, Pelikan's observations are apposite in this connection: "Revisionists have attempted to show that on the doctrine of justification and on the authority of Scripture the formulations of Trent are actually a compromise between the Reformation extreme and the opposite extreme of certain fifteenth century theologians. Only when they are read in the light of both extremes, rather than merely in the light of the reformers, are these formulations said to come into proper perspective. There is undoubtedly something to be said for this interpretation, and it deserves more careful attention than Protestant theologians have been willing to give it. But it does not appear to have demonstrated its fundamental contention; for the explicit target of Trent's anathema is consistently the Reformation position — or 'extreme' — while some fairly subtle and sophisticated historical scholarship is often necessary to unearth the opposite 'extreme' also included in the condemnations." (Jaroslav Jan Pelikan, The Riddle of Roman Catholicism [New York: Abingdon Press, c. 1959], pp. 52—53.) D'Andrada's work has never been officially disavowed. Chemnitz unquestionably intended to reply to the interpretation of the Tridentine decrees that appeared to him to square with the intentions of the council fathers.

Chemnitz for having at times confused the opinion of the theologians of d'Andrada's type with the real content of the decrees.

The preparation of the Examen absorbed Chemnitz' leisure for the next nine years. By the end of March 1565 he had worked out the first part sufficiently to send it to a colleague in Frankfurt-am-Main, Matthias Ritter (1526—1588), with the request that he try to find a publisher. On Christmas Eve of that year Chemnitz was still reading proof and finding "manifold and most horrible errors" (multiplicia et foedissima errata). The following spring the first part came out, dedicated to Duke Albert Frederick (1553—1618), the youthful son of Duke Albert the Elder. The second part followed in the same year, dedicated to Margrave John of Brandenburg-Çustrin, after Chemnitz' friend, Duke Julius of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, had refused the honor because of the militant commitment of his father, the still reigning Duke Henry, to the Roman Catholic party. In 1573 both the third part, dedicated to Elector John George (1525 to 1598) of Brandenburg, and the fourth and final part, dedicated to Duke Henry Julius (1554—1613) of Brandenburg-Wolfenbüttel, the son of Duke Julius, who now reigned as a Lutheran in his deceased father's domains, came out.

Part One is prefaced with a Narratio de Synodo Nicena versibus exposita ("Narrative Account of the Council of Nicea Set Forth in Verses"), four solid double-spaced pages of hexameters in the Preuss edition, composed by Matthias Berg, M.A. (1536 to 1592), headmaster of St. Catharine's School in Brunswick. The first part discusses the teaching about traditions, original sin, concupiscence, the word "sin," the conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, the works of unbelievers, free will, justification, faith, and good works. The second part discusses the sacraments in general, Baptism, confirmation, the sacrament of the Eucharist, Communion under both appearances, the mass, penance, contrition, confession, satisfactions, extreme unction, the sacrament of orders, and matrimony. The third part covers the issues of virginity, priestly celibacy, purgatory, and the invocation of the saints. The fourth part continues the third, with sections on the relics of the saints, images, indulgences, fasting, the distinction of foods, and the feasts of the calendar.

Since the first edition, there has never

---

35 Preuss, "Historia libri impressi," in his edition of the Examen, pp. 959—964. The frequent dating of the printing of the first part in 1565 is accordingly wrong.

36 In 1578 Berg subscribed the Formula of Concord, but soon began to have doubts about the correctness of some of its definitions. He corresponded with Reformed theologians like Theodore de Bèze (1519—1605) in Geneva and with Mark Menning (d. 1584) in Bremen, and in 1580 he formally withdrew his subscription to the Formula in a "Protestation" to the Brunswick ministerium. In this document he took issue with the Formula on predestination and free will, on the hypostatic union and the exchange of qualities of our Lord's two natures, on our Lord's ascension and session, and on the Holy Communion. Cited to answer before the ministerium, Berg was charged by Chemnitz with Calvinism. Berg thereupon changed his mind again, and the city council and the ministerium commanded him to do public penance in St. Ulric's Church: He was to kneel throughout the sermon at vespers on Trinity XI and thereupon formally to recall his errors. This he did, but in 1582 he relapsed into Calvinistic ways of thought again, and the city council gave him eight days in which to go into exile. Berg spent the rest of his life as a professor at the University of Altdorf. (Rehtmeyer, III, 500 to 503; appendix, 347—359.)
been a century in which the Examen was not republished. Twenty subsequent editions came out in Frankfurt-am-Main (two in 1574, one each in 1576, 1577, 1578, 1585, 1588, and 1590, two in 1596, one each in 1599, 1605, 1606, and 1609, two in 1615, one each in 1619, 1642, 1690, and 1707), plus five in Geneva (1614, 1634, 1641, 1667, and 1668), and one each in Wittenberg (1598), Berlin (1861), and Leipzig (1915).

37 The information contained in this paragraph is based on Preuss, pp. 961—962; Mumm, pp. 90—91; Gottfried Noth, Grundlinien der Theologie des Martin Chemnitz, 1930, an unpublished holographic copy of a University of Erlangen doctoral dissertation (available to this writer in a microfilm copy of the original in the Universitätsbibliothek, Erlangen), p. ii; a careful review of the holdings of the library of Concordia Seminary in St. Louis; an examination of the Library of Congress Union Catalog in Washington, D.C., and of the catalogs of the libraries of the British Museum in London, the University of Erlangen, the University of Marburg, the University of Kiel, the University of Bern, Luther Theological Seminary in St. Paul, the Theological Seminary of Capital University in Columbus, Warburg Theological Seminary in Dubuque, the Rock Island (Illinois) Campus of the Lutheran School of Theology, Northwestern Lutheran Seminary in Minneapolis, the Geistliches Ministerium in Greifswald, and the Société des Pasteurs et Ministres in Neuchâtel, and of the catalogs of the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris, the Deutsche Staatsbibliothek in East Berlin, the Bayerische Staatsbibliothek in Munich, the Herzog-August-Bibliothek in Wolfenbüttel, the Bibliothek der Hansestadt Lübeck, the Bibliothèque Publique et Universitaire of Geneva, and the Stadtbibliothek of Zurich. — The edition of 1576 (so the colophon; the title page gives the date as 1577), not otherwise recorded, is represented by a copy of Part One in the Universitätsbibliothek Erlangen; the publisher is Paul Reffeler (data confirmed in a letter from Bibliothekrat Dr. Frankenberger, dated Feb. 5, 1964). The edition of 1577 (so both title-page and colophon), not otherwise recorded, is represented by a copy of Part One in the Library of Concordia Seminary.

Translations of the Examen

From a note that may have been written as early as 1571, it appears that John Zanger translated at least a part of the Examen into German; if the work was ever printed, no copies have survived. All four parts are included in the stout folio German translation by George Nigrinus, published in 1576/1577.

38 Examen, das ist, Erörterung des Tridentinischen Concilii in Latein beschrieben und in vier Theil verfasst, darin eine starke vollkommene Widerlegung der jüngernem Hauptpunkten der ganzen papistischen Lehre, aus dem Grunds der H. Schrift und dem Consens der rechtlebenden Väter zusammen getragen und in ein Buch verfasst, aus dem Latein ver- teutscht durch Georgium Nigrimum (Frankfurt-am-Main: [Georg Raben], 1576 [colophon date: 1577]). This writer has been given generous access to the copy of the Reverend Robert Wilken of the Gettysburg (Penn.) Theological Seminary faculty.

39 Examen Concilii Tridentini, d. h. Prüfung des Concil von Trient, worin die Hauptlebren des ganzen Papstbams sowohl aus dem Quellen heiliger Schrifft als auch dem Consens der rechgläubigen Väter gründlich und vollständig widerlegt werden, aus dem Lateinischen aufs neue ins Deutsche übertragen von eilichen lutherischen Pastorren (St. Louis: L. Volkening, 1875; xx, 256 pp.). The translator of the first part, all that was ever actually published, was Carl Adolf Frank (1846—1922).

40 Examen Concilii Tridentini, das ist, Beleuchtung und Widerlegung der Beschlüsse des tridentinischen Konzils, deutsch bearbeitet von R. Benäxen in Verbindung mit Chr(istoph) E(rnst) Lauthards [1823—1902] (Leipzig: Dörf- fling und Franke, 1884; xvi, 487 pp.).
In 1582 an English translation of the section on traditions was published in London by Thomas Purfoot and William Pounsonbie with the title A Discoverie and Batterie of the Great Fort of Unwritten Traditions: Otherwise, An Examination of the Counsell of Trent Touching the Decree of Traditions, done by Martinus Chemnitus in Latine and translated into English. The translation is dedicated to Sir James Altham (died 1617), whom Francis Bacon called "one of the gravest and most reverend judges of this kingdom." On page 85 the translator, identified only by the initials R.V., promises: "The discourse of the Scripture is placed before this of traditions, which, if God will, shall one day be translated also."

On Altham see the article in The Dictionary of National Biography, I (1885), 348.

The library of Concordia Seminary in St. Louis has an electrostatic copy of this 85-page book. The translator has not been identified. For a number of reasons, this writer would suggest further inquiry into the possibility that the translator may have been the Richard Vennar(d), or Venner, whose career is sketched in The Dictionary of National Biography, XX (1899), 210–212. (1) For quite a period before and after 1582, Vennar is apparently the only British author known to have published under the initials R. V. (2) Just prior to June 10, 1581, when he was admitted to Lincoln’s Inn, Vennar had returned to England from a long visit to the Continent, including Germany. (3) Both Altham, to whom A Discoverie is dedicated, and Vennar were lawyers. (4) The subsequent course of Vennar’s life would account for his failure to complete, or at least to publish, the promised section of the Examen on the Sacred Scriptures. (5) Vennar is known to have been anti-Roman-Catholic and to have had, among other interests, a lively interest in religion. In 1601 Thomas Este of London published Vennar’s The Right Way to Heaven and the True Testimonie of a Faithfull and Loyall Subject. The first part of this work was reprinted in 1602 under the title The Right Way to Heaven and a Faithfully translated Testimonie of a Faithful Subject, dedicated to James I, as The True Testimonie of a Faithful Subject, Containing . . . a Thanksgiving to God for the Happie Deliverie of the House of Parliament from the Late Horrible Treason (that is, the Gunpowder Plot).

In 1603 the Reverend Frederick H. S. Hassold, D.D., a retired Lutheran pastor of Glenside, Australia, brought to a conclusion his typewritten 2,505-folio translation of the Examen into English. An abridged English translation, which will reproduce in their entirety Sections I and VIII of the commonplace on Sacred Scriptures and the whole of the commonplaces on traditions, free will, justification, the sacrament of the Eucharist, the mass, purgatory, and indulgences, with the balance of the Examen summarized, is in preparation under the aegis of the Committee on Scholarly Research of The Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod.

In 1588 the then 30-year-old Hungarian Lutheran Baron Gergely Horváth of Felső-Eör published a faithful sentence-by-sentence Magyar translation of paragraphs 9 through 11 of Part Four, locus III, section iii of the Examen, a discussion of the legitimacy of images.

Way to Heaven and A Good Precedent for Lawyers and All Other Good Christians, the latter part in 1605, dedicated to James I, as The True Testimonie of a Faithful Subject, Containing . . . a Thanksgiving to God for the Happie Deliverie of the House of Parliament from the Late Horrible Treason (that is, the Gunpowder Plot).

The typescript of this translation, complete except for some of the prayers in Part Three, locus IV, sectio ii, has been acquired by the Committee on Scholarly Research of The Lutheran Church—Missouri Synod. It has been microfilmed and xeroxed and copies are available for sale to libraries of universities and theological seminaries.

The statement is frequently made that the Examen was translated into French. Actually, this is true only of part of Part Four. In 1599 the first commonplace of this part, on the relics of the saints, was published in a French translation as an appendix to an edition of John Calvin's Traité des reliques, while another vol-

The printer, although not named on the title page, is certain to have been David Gutgesel, a devoted Lutheran whose press issued other orthodox Lutheran publications and of whom the chronicle of the city of Belfort affirms that "he published neither Sacramentarian nor Arian nor Anabaptist books nor any other heretical writings."

In his 16th year Baron Horváth had begun a tour that kept him from his homeland for seven years and that took him to Germany (where he attended the Luther universities of Wittenberg and Strasbourg), Holland, Switzerland (where he studied at the University of Basel and the Academy of Geneva) and Italy. Back in Felis-Eor, he set up an academy in one of his castles, established generous scholarships for poor students, and himself joined the teaching staff as teacher of dialectics, ethics, and rhetoric. At this particular time the number of Roman Catholics in Hungary had declined to a point where they no longer constituted a threat to the Lutheran movement. More dangerous was the rising tide of Reformed influence, and Baron Horváth did what he could to stem it. Among his polemical works is a multivolume Latin polemic against the Reformed preacher Sebastian (Ambrose) Lam of Kesmark. The anti-iconoclastic purpose behind Baron Horváth's publication of the Chemnitz excerpt contributed to the charge of being an image-worshiper that the Reformed party brought against him. (The present writer owes this information to the kindness of the Reverend Jenő Virág, librarian at the Lutheran Theological Academy in Budapest, who in turn states that he derived it from an article by Miklós Véresy in a professional librarians' journal. Pastor Virág states that he has personally examined a surviving copy of Baron Horváth's little translation.)

45 Jean Calvin, Traité des reliques, ou, Advertissement ouvert et droit à la Chrestienté, s'il se faisoit inventaire de tous les corps saints et reliques . . . autre traité de reliques contre le décret du Concile de Trente, traduit du Latin de M. Chemnitz . . . Geneva, P. de la Rovière, 1599). The volume also included French translations of an anonymous inventory of the relics of Rome (from the Italian) and of a similarly anonymous reply to Bellarmin's assertions in favor of relics. The translator is not identified. A second edition of the work came out in 1863.

46 Traité des indulgences contre le décret du Concile de Trente; breifve considération sur l'an du Jubilé; le vrai et grand pardon général de pleniére rémission des péchés. Traduit du Latin de M. Chemnitz avec une préface (Geneva: I. Choüet, 1599; 239 pp.). The translator is not identified.

47 The proponent in the fifth disputation was Count Axel Gustafsson Oxenstierna (1583 to 1654), who became the chancellor of Sweden a decade later.
of Luther and a disciple of Melanchthon. Put differently, Chemnitz reproduces the theological concerns of Luther with the careful precision that the Brunswick superintendent had learned from his mentor Melanchthon, for whom he always maintained a dutiful respect, even when circumstances required him to dissent from some of Melanchthon’s positions.48

One can differentiate three types of “Melanchthonianism” in the disciples of the Praeceptor Germaniae. One type we can call “Cryptocalvinist.” It is the position that some of Melanchthon’s more extreme disciples in Wittenberg and elsewhere took when they exaggerated and absolutized incidental elements of Melanchthon’s theology. After the victory of the Formula of Concord forced the representatives of this school in many Lutheran territories out of the Lutheran Church and into the Reformed camp, this theological emphasis helped to give German Reformed Orthodoxy some of the characteristic features — notably a stress upon the universality of grace — that differentiate it from the more uncompromisingly predestinarian Reformed Orthodoxy of Switzerland and pre-Arminian Holland.49 With this aberration Chemnitz had no sympathy.

The second type of Melanchthonian inheritance we can call “Calixtine.” It is the moderate, humanistic approach that combined an open commitment to the Lutheran position with a greater degree of tolerance and of concern for the unity of the empirical church than many of the representatives of classic Lutheran Orthodoxy commonly displayed. This type of Melanchthonianism, although it both antedated and survived the great Helmstedt theologian, found expression in the movement associated with the name of George Calixtus.50

The third type we can call “Chemnitian.” On issues where Lutheran and Reformed theology take different positions — even where Reformed theology appeals to a real or fancied agreement with Melanchthon for support — Chemnitz takes the Lutheran view on principle, but 48 Gottfried Noth explores the tension between the Lutheran and the Melanchthonian elements in the theology of Chemnitz in his Grundzüge der Theologie des Martin Chemnitz (see n. 37). The three major sections discuss Chemnitz’ views of Scripture and tradition (for which Noth draws heavily on the Examen for documentation), his soteriology, and his sacramental doctrine in relation to his Christology. Noth examines the same tension in a narrower segment of Chemnitz’ theology in his article, “Pec­ cato coarcta conscientiam,” in Friedrich Hübner, Wilhelm Maurer, and Ernst Kinder, ed., Gedenkschrift für D. Werner Eierl: Beiträge zur historischen und systematischen Theologie (Berlin: Lutherisches Verlagshaus, 1953), pp. 211 to 219.

49 The relationship of Melanchthonianism to German Reformed theology is complex and must not be oversimplified, as Heinrich Heppe (1820—1879) did in his day. Concerning him Karl Barth observes: “According to him it was strangely not Calvin but the later Melanchthon who, taken strictly, would have to have been the father of Reformed theology” (Barth’s introduction to Heinrich Heppe, Die Dogmatik der evangelisch-reformierten Kirche, ed. Ernst Bizer, 2d ed. [Neukirchen Kreis Moers: Neukirchener Verlag, 1958], p. ix; see Bizer’s historical introduction to this work passim pp. xxxiv—lvi; especially p. xli).

without the bitter anti-"Philippist" polemics of the "Gnesio-Lutherans." Among the major representatives of this type of Melanchthonianism are Chemnitz himself and his two fellow protégés of Melanchthon among the coauthors of the Formula of Concord, Nicholas Selnecker and David Chytraeus.

The "Lutheran" emphases that one would expect to find in Chemnitz are not missing. We shall take our examples exclusively from Part One of the Examen.

In his teaching on Sacred Scripture, Chemnitz may stand as an epitome of the historic tension in Lutheran theology between a defensible Biblicism which insists that the Sacred Scriptures are the sole rule and norm of all articles of faith on the one hand and a profound concern for every insight that the tradition of the church can provide for the proper understanding of the divine oracles on the other. Chemnitz manages to maintain both emphases in a proper balance. Thus against the charge that the Lutheran position in the matter of relics of the saints is a novelty, he declares defiantly: "Our antiquity is Christ and the Sacred Scriptures." But with equal energy he rejects the charge that Lutherans "across the board attribute no value to the witness of antiquity, count the authority of the Fathers as without weight, and weaken the approval, the faith, and the majesty of the church," and he counters with the declaration: "We give

The doctrine of the divine forgiveness of sins by grace for Christ's sake through faith — what Lutheran theology technically describes as "justification" — is central for Chemnitz. ("The sum total and, as it were, the scope of all of the Sacred Scriptures is the remission of sins," he observes.) Justification is "the chief article of Christian doctrine." 56 Justifying faith is "that instrument or organ through which we seek, lay hold of, accept, and apply to ourselves the mercy of God in the word of the Gospel — of a God who takes away sins and receives us to eternal life on account of His Son, our Mediator." 57 We "ought not to attribute to the merits of our own works the expiation of our sins or the offering of a propitiation for our sins, for this belongs to an office which is exclusively that of Christ, the Mediator. Hence the remission of sins, reconciliation with God, adoption, salvation, and life eternal do not depend on our merits, but they are given graminously on account of the merit and the obedience of the Son of God, and they are received through faith. But once we have been reconciled, good works thereupon please God through faith on account of the Mediator, and so they have spiritual and bodily rewards both in and after this life." 58

Chemnitz has a high view of the sacred ministry. In connection with his discussion of holy absolution, he says: "Even though the keys are given to the church herself, as the ancients rightly report, nevertheless we in no way believe that any Christian, without distinction and without a legitimate vocation, ought or can arrogate to himself or exercise the ministry of the Word and of the sacraments. But just as in a case of necessity the ancients say that any Christian layman can administer the sacrament of baptism, so Luther said the same thing with reference to absolution in a case of necessity where a priest is not to be had, and he said nothing more than what Peter Lombard . . . and Gratian . . . say about a case of necessity on the basis of the opinions of the ancients." 59 A little later on he asserts in the same vein: "God, who alone takes away sins, does not do this without means but through the ministry of the Word and of the sacraments." 60 The fact of baptism does not dispense Christian lay people from the due reverence to and recognition of the authority of the sacred ministry, any more than it dispenses them from their due obedience to the political authorities. 61

Chemnitz sees values in ascetic disciplines. He agrees that there is a right kind of fasting, which believers can offer as a voluntary sacrifice in their worship of God. 62

56 Part One, locus VIII, examen, par. 1, p. 146A. At the same time Chemnitz refuses to make of this doctrine what a later age of comparative theologians would call a "material principle." While he recognizes the relatedness of all revelation, he also accepts the multiplicity and the variety of the self-disclosure of God's being and purposes.

57 Part One, locus IX, sectio ii, par. 1, p. 182A.

58 Part One, locus X, quæstio iv, par. 1, p. 212B. See also Apology of the Augsburg Confession, IV, 348—372. (So that the reader can satisfy himself of the congruence of Chemnitz' position with the Lutheran symbolical books, cross references to the latter are offered in this and the following footnotes.)
He recognizes that celibacy is something which individuals with the necessary gift for it can intentionally undertake and sets up six rules to guide such persons, and he endorses in all its terms the confession of the fourth-century Council of Gangra: "The holy church of God with humility admires and glorifies virginity, praises widowhood, and honors and supports the chaste bond of marriage." At the same time he takes the terms usus and actio broadly enough to include the primitive practice of having the deacons take the body and blood of Christ to the absent members of the community and the practice of some early bishops of Rome of sending part of the Eucharist from their own celebrations as a symbol of intercommunion to the places in the city where bishops and priests from Asia and elsewhere were celebrating the Sacrament of the Altar. Even with reference to the ancient practice which had communicants take with them from the celebration of the Eucharist some of the consecrated species for private communion at home (attested as late as Saint Augustine) and the primitive custom of reserving the Sacrament for possible administration to the dying, Chemnitz asserts (although withholding his approval): "We do not condemn those ancients who observed this custom, for they had weighty grounds for doing so by reason of their times."

63 Part Three, locus I, sectio ii, caput v, pp. 541—544. See also Apology, XXIII, 36—40. 55. 67—69; XXVII, 21 and 27.

64 Part Three, locus I, sectio ii, p. 523B.

65 Part Three, locus IV, sectio i, par. 19, p. 660A. See also Apology, XXI, 9 and 27; Smalcald Articles, Part Two, II, 26.
We encounter in Chemnitz a profound Eucharistic piety. Typical is this assertion: "In the Eucharist we receive a most certain and excellent pledge of our reconciliation with God, the forgiveness of sins, immortality, and future glorification. And indeed in this sacrament Christ pours out generously the wealth of His divine love toward men. For that body which He gave into death He gives to us in His Supper as food, so that from it, as from a solid, divine, and life-giving food we may live, be nourished, grow, be comforted, and be ultimately changed into Him, never to be separated from Him, as St. Augustine says rightly, in Christ's person: 'You will not change Me into yourself, but you will be changed into Me.' And: '[O] holy banquet, in which Christ is received, the memory of His Passion is recalled, the soul is filled with grace, and a pledge of glory to come is given to us.' 69

He approves the adoration of Christ, God and man, who is present in the Holy Communion with a peculiar kind of presence and grace so that here He truly and substantially conveys to all the communicants His body and His blood, although of course Chemnitz rejects an adoration of the bread and wine as such.71 He lists seven ways in which the mass can rightly be called a sacrifice: (1) Because in the mass the death of Christ is proclaimed in the reading and explication of the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures and a consideration of the causes and benefits of the Passion of Christ is set forth out of the Word of God (Rom. 15:16; Phil. 2:17; I Peter 2:5); (2) in the celebration of the Holy Communion the praises of God are spoken and sung (Heb. 13:15; Ps. 50:14); (3) the liturgical action includes public prayers and common acts of thanksgiving; (4) since the celebration is the occasion for offering alms for the relief of the poor, the whole action can be called a sacrifice; (5) in the mass we consecrate our whole selves to God, so that we may cleave to God in a holy association, we engage in exercises of repentance and faith, and our love for God and the neighbor is kindled; (6) the Eucharistic blessing or consecration, inasmuch as it is part of the Gospel ministry, can be called a sacrifice (Rom. 15:16); (7) the distribution of and participation in the Holy Communion can be called a sacrifice because it takes place as a memorial of the unique sacrifice of Christ and because the same Victim who was once offered for our sins on the cross is there distributed and received.72

69 The antiphon upon Magnificat at the Second Vespers of the Feast of Corpus Christi, presumably from the pen of St. Thomas Aquinas (1225?—1274).

70 Part Two, locut IV, sectio ii, examen, par. 3, pp. 303—304.

71 Part Two, locus IV, sectio v, par. 1, p. 320B.

72 Part Two, locus VI, sectio i, articulus ii, pp. 383—384. See also Apology, XXIV, 16 to 40.
In the realm of ceremonial, he regards the dilution of the wine in the Holy Communion with a little water as an indifferent matter, concedes that our Lord probably mixed water with the wine at the first Eucharist, and notes that the custom was general (although probably not universal) in the ancient church.73

He accepts (recte definit; non male definit) the definition of catholicity given in his Commonitory by St. Vincent of Lerinum (died before 450) — quod ubique, quod semper, quod ab omnibus creditum est — and uses it against his opponents a number of times, for instance, in connection with the reservation of the Holy Eucharist and the invocation of the saints.74

THE METHOD OF THE Examen

Methodologically, Chemnitz follows a general pattern, modified to meet the exigencies of the particular issue. He quotes in full the Tridentine statement under discussion. Next he points out the errors that he finds expressed or latent in it. He examines these on the basis of the Sacred Scriptures. Thereupon he considers the papalist rebuttals of his evidence, refutes the objections, fortifies the lutheran position with appropriate Biblical arguments, and replies to objections based on an appeal to tradition by providing a genetic account of the doctrine or practice at issue.

Chemnitz emerges from the Examen, as from his other works, as a Biblical theologian who is, unlike the Lutheran orthodox theologians of the next century, "rather suspicious of scholastic philosophy."75

His real target is the dogmatic system emerging at Trent, as he sees it through d’Andrada’s eyes. The Society of Jesus is no longer the novel peril that it appears to be on the pages of the Theologiae Jesuitarum praecipua capita. Even d’Andrada recedes into the background after Part One. Altogether Chemnitz cites an astonishingly small number of Roman Catholic theologians by name. In the dogmatic system that his adversaries are developing he senses the striving of the papacy for supremacy that he unhesitatingly calls “Antichristian” and that since the Gallican movement has been called “ultramontane.” “Ultimately,” he says in one of the bitterest passages of the Examen, “it is all the same [to the papalists] whatever religion anybody embraces, whether it be that of the philosophers or even that of the Turks, as long as the state of their dominion remains unaffected.”76

Chemnitz understands that, as d’Andrada interprets them for him, Trent’s doctrinal decrees are simply the extension and the systematization of a very late medieval scholasticism, just as he points out fre-sequently that the antithesis which Trent anathematizes is a distorted caricature of the reformers' real position.

His concern is with the issues before him. His style makes no pretense at literary artistry. He has his own vocabulary, which needs to be mastered. He is often diffuse and from commonplace to commonplace he is frequently redundant and repetitious; this may reflect merely a reluctance to wield a blue pencil, but it may also indicate an awareness that his readers are likely to consult his book on an \emph{ad hoc} basis rather than to read it through. There are more than a few asides that are something less than fully germane to his argument.

He takes his weapons where he finds them. In his masterful use of patristic evidence in support of his polemics he stands squarely in the Lutheran tradition of the 16th and 17th centuries exemplified before him by his mentor Melanchthon and by Matthias Vlačić (Flacius) (1520–1575) and by John Gerhard and George Calixtus and Abraham Calovius after him. Lutherans for whom the appeal to Christian antiquity seems a betrayal of their \emph{nuda Scriptura} principle have sometimes stressed that Chemnitz is merely catering for the willingness of both theologians and the common folk to be impressed by the witness of the church fathers. They have also urged that Chemnitz is merely using a gambit designed to demoralize his opponents by turning against them the charge with which they sought to write off the Reformation, namely that the reformers were innovating. It must be noted, however, that Chemnitz’s honest concern to be standing in the continuity of the church is at least as potent a factor as either of the other two motives mentioned.\footnote{Toward the fathers of the primitive church he exhibits a charitable and dutiful piety that he expresses in the principle voiced in connection with a "rash assertion" of St. Epiphanius: "\emph{Pudenda patrum praestat tegere quam denudare nisi adversariorum impudentia veritatem inde oppugnantium aliud cogat}" (Part Three, locus II, caput iv, par. 25, p. 578A).}

Chemnitz’ impressive scholarship reflects the best learning of the times, and he prides himself on the fact that he used original sources which he himself verified and did not — as his opponents at times were wont to do — acquire his wisdom only from commentaries and florilegia.\footnote{Part One, locus I, sectio iv, articulus i, par. 18, p. 25A (replying to the charge that "like a debauchee [Chemnitz] operates with mutilated and abbreviated statements of the holy [fathers], to defraud the inexperienced multitude"): "\emph{Nos vero Dei beneficio et possimus et sollemus autorum loca inspicere, nec ex solis commentariis sapere.}"}

Yet his learning was that of his times and must be gauged by that criterion. (By the same token, in spite of the stimulation that his copious work gave to theological inquiry — notably in the fields of systematic, polemic, and historical theology — it cannot simply be invoked in the 20th century in the way it could be in the 16th.)\footnote{For example, neither Chemnitz’ concern for truth nor his erudition always preserved him from exaggerating the congruity of the Lutheran position and that of certain of the fathers whom he adduces or of minimizing the differences between them. On p. 39, n. 4, Mumm catalogs a few examples.}

It does no discredit to Chemnitz to concede that he was too close to the event of Trent to be able to have a wholly balanced view of the council, its proceedings, and its historical significance. The additional material that four centuries have made available enable us to correct many details, and the scholarly researches into the progress of the debates give us a better understanding of the process by which the council arrived at its formulations. Chemnitz might divine but he could not foresee the course of four centuries of Roman Catholic Church history, and the theological developments implied by the condemnations of Bajus and Jansenism, by the dogmatic definitions of 1854, 1870, and 1950, or by the contemporary impact of the Biblical, liturgical, and ecumenical movements that have produced the thrust toward modernization of which Vatican II is the monument.

Chemnitz’ references to his adversaries sometimes sound unduly harsh and uncharitable to the ears of our ecumenically conditioned age. It is, however, if anything somewhat more restrained than the run-of-the-mine polemical diction of the period. The pejorative opinions that he expresses about his opponents, their “lies,” and their “deceptions” is compounded in equal parts of the conventional language of polemical rhetoric and of the passionate certitude of the rectitude of his own position.80

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC REACTION

The Roman Catholic response to the Examen was not slow in coming.

80 “With the rigidity of men who knew before they started just where their analysis would lead them, the defenders of the faith demolished their opponents without ever meeting them or their arguments. But as it was carried on by men like Martin Chemnitz . . . the polemical theology of these centuries did voice a testimony that was always firm and sometimes even gentle.” (Pelikan, The Riddle of Roman Catholicism, p. 218.)

It was with reference to the Examen that the papal nuncio Count Bartholomew de Portia called Chemnitz “the most impious of Lutherans (sceletatissimus Lutheranus).”81 Through 1717, Mumm records eleven Roman Catholic replies to Chemnitz’ work.82

In 1568 the Louvain professor Jodoc Ravesteyn (1506—1570) published the first part of his Apology; the second part came out in the year of his death.83 In 1575 William Damasus van der Linde (1525—1588), successively Bishop of Roermond and of Ghent, came out with the first of two broadsides against the Examen.84 The second came out in 1577.85

82 Mumm, pp. 92—94.

83 Jodocus Ravesteyn, Apologiae sua defensionis pro varii sacrosancti concilii Tridentini, quae quidem ad religionem et doctrinam Christianam pertinent, adversus censuras et examen Martini Chemnitzi pars prima (altera) (Louvain: Petrus Zangrius, 1568—1570) (Schottenloher 43218). Another edition came out in Cologne in 1608. A projected third part was never published.

84 Wilhelmus Damasus Lindanus, Stromatum libri tres pro varii sacrosancti concilii Tridentini decretis ac positiis de suscipiendis una cum divina scriptura etiam apostolicis traditionibus et pro panopliae suae evangelicae atque apologeticae defensione contra Marini Chemnitzii libri V, contra Marini Chemnitzii Lutherani superintendentis calumniis (Cologne: Maternus Cholinus, 1575; 71 pp. in folio) (Schottenloher 43218d). A second edition from the same press, dated 1577, has 264 pages in small-octavo format.

85 Lindanus, De apostolico virginitatis voto atque evangelico sacerdotum coelitatum pro defensione sancti concilii Tridentini libri V, contra Marini Chemnitzii Lutherani superintendentis calumniis (Cologne: Maternus Cholinus, 1577; 24, 259 pp.). A second edition came out at Antwerp in 1579.
The most ambitious reply was that of d’Andrada himself, under the title Defensio Tridentinae fidei ("Defense of the Tridentine Faith"). His death kept him from discussing more than the first five sessions. His two brothers edited the work posthumously, and the second volume promised in the Ad lectorem never appeared. The introduction ends with a somewhat condescending disavowal of Chemnitz’ suggestion that d’Andrada had written his Orthodoxae explanationes at the behest of the Tridentine fathers.

86 Didacus Payva Andradius, Defensio Tridentinae fidei catholicae et integerrimae quinque libris comprehensa adversus haereticorum detestabiles calumnias et praesertim Martini Chemnitii Germani ([Lisbon: N. p., 1578]). The library of Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, has an electrostatic copy of an undated but clearly a very early edition made from the copy in the library of the theological seminary of the Wisconsin Evangelical Lutheran Synod in Mequon, Wisconsin, with the kind permission of the librarian at the latter school. The imprimitur (censeo recendi posse) of Bartholomew Ferreira in the name of Henry, Cardinal of Portugal, the supreme inquisitor, which sees Chemnitz and his fellow heretics “clingning to the remnant of their master, Satan, who in tempting our Savior Christ in the desert perversely cited passages of the most sacred Scriptures,” is dated May 8, 1575. The author dedicated the work to Gregory XIII (1502—1585). Jerome Osorio (1506—1580), Bishop of Silves in Algarve, wrote a commendatory letter as a preface.

An essay on the authority of general councils is followed by treatises on the authority of the Sacred Scriptures and of tradition, on the canonical books, on the authority of the Vulgate, and on original sin and the remnants of original sin or the concupiscence which is left in the soul after Holy Baptism. Four poems by Brother Cosmas of the Presentation, O. S. A., in tribute to d’Andrada, introduce the book. The fourth, a decastich addressed to Chemnitz, begins:

Bis, Martine, paras bello certare nefando; Bis victus, Payva bis superante cadis.

("Martin, twice you prepare to engage in your criminal warfare, Twice defeated you fall while d’Andrada twice knows success.")

It is d’Andrada’s “best work,” both solider and tighter than the Orthodoxae...
explicationes,90 and quite understandably it won for him the thanks of the pope. Roman Catholic writers of the present like to point out that the work “forced even Chemnitz to proclaim the knowledge and the alluring eloquence of his adversary.” 91

Others who wrote against the Examen were the ex-Lutheran Caspar Franck (1543—1584); 92 Robert Cardinal Bellarmine (1542—1621), who regards Chemnitz as one of his major adversaries; 93 Gregory de Valentia (1551—1603),94 and the energetic Jesuit proselytizer John Kraus (1649—1732).95

Of interest chiefly because Mumm, mistaking the date, lists it as the first Roman Catholic reply to the Examen, is the clandestinely published mid-17th-century work of an otherwise unknown Martin Gärtner, presumed to have been a Roman Catholic priest, against Chemnitz’ treatment of the Eucharist.96

90 So C. Toussaint in Dictionnaire de théologie catholique, I (1909), 1179, who notes that Book 5 is of special interest for the large number of savants’ opinions on the Immaculate Conception of the B. V. M. which it assembles. Of d’Andrada’s remaining works a treatise De conciliorum potestate and seven volumes of Portuguese sermons were published, but his reputation derives from the Orbodoxiae explicationes and the Defensio (Cesare Bertola, in Enciclopedia cattolica, I[1948], 1181).

91 So, for instance, Toussaint, loc. cit., and L. Loevenbruck, in Dictionnaire de théologie catholique, II (1905), 2357.

Some Roman Catholic readers, however, appear to have found the Examen persuasive. Among them was a Jesuit-trained Austrian canon at Sechow in Styria, Francis Leopold von Reissing, who had received permission to read canonically prohibited books. The Examen planted the first seeds of doubt in his mind. They grew until he finally determined to convert to the Lutheran Church. After two years' imprisonment in Rome, the Inquisition sentenced him to lifelong retirement in the Collegio Santa Maria de Pace. He escaped to Genoa and fled on foot via Switzerland to Jena. Here he was received into the Lutheran Church. He later became a Lutheran clergyman, first in Slesvig, then in Blankenburg in the Duchy of Oldenburg. After 1715 he drops out of sight. After his conversion to the Lutheran religion he declared: "What shall I write about Martin Chemnitz, to whom, after God, owe my conversion, and whose really unanswerable Examen Concilii Tridentini puts all papalist libraries to shame? . . . I confess, to the highest comfort of my soul, that I was converted wholly and entirely through the diligent reading of Dr. Martin Chemnitz' Examen Concilii Tridentini." 98 "J.R.W." is clearly John Roger Weir (Weyer), who describes himself (on the title page of a dissuasive from conversion to Roman Catholicism which he delivered at the University of Wittenberg in 1653) as Equitis magister and whom the Rector Magnificus, Geoffrey Schwab (Suevus) (d. 1659), in inviting the Wittenberg students to the lecture described as an ex-papalist and a praefectus turmae in the imperial army.\(^9^9\) He was the brother-in-law of the Lutheran educator, historian, and doctor of medicine Sylvester Kundmann (1595—1656), who recommended to him the reading of the Sacred Scriptures and of Chemnitz' Examen. In the revocatory address which he delivered in 1651, Weir himself relates that the first time he read the Examen though he was still so thoroughly under Jesuit influence that he "refused to let himself be drawn into the net of the Lord Christ." It was only after a period of agnosticism and during a crisis in his life brought on by his experiences in the Thirty Years' War that the works which his brother-in-law had recommended to him exerted a decisive effect.\(^1^0^0\)

99 Johannes Rogerius Weir, De non imitando ad vomitum redeunte cane, hoc est, de vitando ad Papismum relapsu oratio (Leipzig: Praelium Ritschianum [1653]), title page and folio 1-3 verso. On p. 13 Weir refers to the Examen of Chemnitz, "the one who overturned the Tridentine conventicle."

100 Goetzius, pp. 11—12, 47. Martin Lipe-nius, Bibliotheca realis theologiae (Frankfurt-am-Main: Johannes Friderici, 1685), p. 673, who consistently misspells Weir's name "Weikers," lists, in addition to De non imitando, Weir's Latin Dissertatio revocatoria (Leipzig, 1651), the same work in German (Leipzig, n. d.), Des H. Römischen Reichts Gefähr (Leipzig, n. d.), and Ursachen, das Pabstium zu verlassen (Leip-zig, n. d.). The second last title is either identical with or a translation of De perenni periculo S(ancti) Rom(an) Imperii (Leipzig, 1652), listed by Johann Heinrich Zedler, Grosses vollständiges Universal-Lexicon, LIV (1747), 1043. Ursachen, das Pabstium zu verlassen may be a German version of De non imitando, since Zedler gives what is apparently a fuller title, Ursachen, das Pabstium zu fliehen und zu meiden (Leipzig, 1653). Zedler also lists a polemic by Weir against Jodoc Kedd, S. J. (1597—1657):

EVALUATIONS OF THE EXAMEN

Quite understandably, one's denomination has through the centuries tended to determine the stance one takes toward Chemnitz' Examen.

After reading the second part of the Examen in manuscript, Lord Andrew von Meyendorff zu Ummendorff (d. 1583), no mean lay theologian in the opinion of many of his ordained contemporaries, con-granulated Chemnitz in a letter dated Jan. 22, 1566: "I do not doubt that your work will be most useful to the church. For even though Bl. [Martin] Luther overthrew the papacy, it is always bent on rising again."\(^1^0^1\)

Andrew Tricesius of Cracow (b. 1520), a Polish poet, hailed the Examen with a quatrain preserved in John Gasmer's Oratio de vita, studiis et obitu Martini Chemniti:

Chemniti, Latii pestis saevissima papae,
Vive diu et magni exemplo felicibus ausis,
Alcide, Satanae exitiabile confice mon-strum;
Sic tibi laus surget quae nullo desinet aevō.
("Long may you live, O Chemnitz, the fiercest plague of Rome's pontiff;
Let this great work be the pattern of dar­ing deeds no less happy,
Through which, Alcides [that is, Hercules],
you slay the dreadful monster of Satan.
So will well forth to you praise that never shall know any ceasing.")\(^1^0^2\)

\(^9^9\) Rehrmeyer, V, Supplementa, 108.

\(^1^0^0\) Preuss, "Vita Martini Chemniti," p. 930. The Latin of the second line is not wholly transparent and admits of various interpretations.
The dean and the professors of the theological faculty of the University of Rostock in the Programma sive testimonium promotionis Martini Chemnitz in doctorem ("Diploma or Certificate of the Promotion of Martin Chemnitz to the Doctorate"), on the Feast of the Visitation, 1568, called the then half-published Examen "an integrated body of true doctrine, to which he has added in connection with each article an insightful and energetic refutation of errors that militate against that truth, partly in the form of most clear and absolutely certain evidences from the divine Word and partly from the opinions of the entire ancient church and the old fathers. With singular diligence, faithfulness, and judgment he inquired into and brought together testimonies and decisions in the matter of doctrine from every period, and he read through all the ancient ecclesiastical writers in order to search out the opinion of Christ's Catholic Church for the vitally necessary and welcome resolution of the most serious controversies of our times and to oppose those who were camouflaging manifest errors with the name of the fathers and of the Catholic Church." ¹⁰³

Nathan Chytraeus (1543—1598), widely traveled headmaster of the Bremen academy and a poet of renown, paid Chemnitz this tribute:

Hactenus invicta et nulli vincenda deinceps Papicolae, ima ipsi rampantur ut ilia papae. ¹⁰⁴

("Never vanquished to date, nor destined to yield to a papist, Whose lower parts are torn open like the Pontiff's own entrails.")

John Francis Buddeus (1667—1729) stated that among Lutheran polemical writings against Roman Catholic error, Chemnitz is as important as all the rest put together. ¹⁰⁵

John George Walch (1693—1775), Luther's editor, asserted that Chemnitz' "Examen reflects special honor upon our church, since it is incontrovertibly to be regarded as the chiefest work against the papists." ¹⁰⁶ Elsewhere he observes that "it is praised as excellent but not diligently read." ¹⁰⁷

Frederick Eberhard Rambach (1708 to 1775), in his German version of Sarpi's Istoria insists: "To the present hour the wound which [the Examen] administered to the papacy through its attack on the Tridentine Council has not been healed. The replies of d'Andrada, Ravenstein, van der Linde, Franck, and Gärtner are so shallow and pitiful that they have not been able in even the slightest degree to detract from the esteem in which it is held." ¹⁰⁸

Henry Schmid (1811—1885) called it "the ablest defence of [the Lutheran position] ever published." ¹⁰⁹

¹⁰³ Rehmeyer, III, Beylagen, pp. 140—141.
¹⁰⁴ Preuss, ibid.
¹⁰⁷ Ibid., p. 795.
¹⁰⁹ Heinrich Schmid, Doctrinal Theology of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, translated by Mumm, no uncritical admirer, calls Chemnitz "the most influential of all of Luther's disciples." The popular adage, Si Martinus non fuisse, Martinus vix stisset, endorses this judgment — "if Martin [Chemnitz] had not come along, Martin [Luther] would hardly have survived." Otto Ritschl (1860—1944) refers to "the elenctic that the great denominational polemicists carried on with holy earnestness from the second half of the 16th century on" and credits the Examen with "laying the foundation for an eminently moderate style that moves along on the rails of serene objectivity."

Although Wilhelm Pauck knows the Examen only on the basis of the abridged Bendixen-Luthardt translation, he declares that "with great thoroughness and without any of the passionate hatred and intemperance that had characterized the polemics of the Reformation age, [Chemnitz] endeavored to prove that the Roman Catholic doctrine was against Scripture and the ancient fathers."

J. L. Neve and O. W. Heick refer to Chemnitz' "brilliant" criticism of Trent.

Ernst Wolf avers that in the Examen Chemnitz "in the role of theological controversalist has expounded the theology of the Reformation in a comprehensive analysis over against Tridentine Roman Catholicism after a fashion that through the centuries has never again been either repeated or achieved."

Jaroslav Jan Pelikan observes that "Chemnitz' critique of the Council of Trent was based on a depth of patristic scholarship difficult to match. He went through the patristic evidence with care and discrimination, sorting out the relevant from the irrelevant and demonstrating that Trent had done violence to the tradition, while the Reformation had been faithful to the best in the tradition by being faithful to the Scriptures."

Franz Lau sees the Examen as "a worthy and knowledgeable presentation and critique of the Tridentine decrees, in which above all else the evangelical Scriptural principle is clearly worked out."

Arthur L. Olson describes Chemnitz as "an important defender of the Reformation against the revived energy of Roman Catholicism manifested in the Counter-Reformation" and the Examen as a major work whose "many editions attest to its influential role as a classic . . . criticism of the Council of Trent."

Bengt Hägglund refers to the Examen... as "exemplary" as far as interconfessional polemics is concerned and as one of Chemnitz' "great contributions." 119

A 20th-century European Roman Catholic appraisal calls the Examen "actually a course in theology as practiced by the Lutheran churches. It was so highly regarded that it put its author into the front rank among the evangelical theologians of the 16th century. Reinforced on a big scale with arguments taken from Biblical interpretation, history and dogmatics, it endeavors to oppose each of the decrees of the Council of Trent." 120 A German Roman Catholic church historian acknowledges that "through his famed polemical work against Trent, Chemnitz exerted a century-spanning influence... on evangelical controversial theology as it confronted the Roman Catholic Church at the same time that he set forth positively the evangelical understanding of the faith." 121

----

120 L. Loevenbruck, in Dictionnaire de théologie catholique, II (1905), 2356.